THE TEARES OF PEACE.

INDVCTIO.

NOw that our Soueraign, the great King of Peace,
Hath (in her grace) outlabour'd Hercules;
And, past his Pillars, stretcht her victories;
Since (as he were sole Soule, t'all Royalties)
He moues all Kings, in this vast Vniuerse,
To cast chaste Nettes, on th'impious lust of Mars;
See, All; and imitate his goodnesse still;
That (hauing cleard so well, warres outward ill)
Hee, God-like, still employes his firme desires,
To cast learn'd ynke vpon those inwarde fires,
That kindle worse Warre, in the mindes of men,
Like to incense the outward Warre againe:
Selfe-loue, inflaming so, mens sensuall bloud,
That all good, publique, drownes in priuate good;
And that, sinks vnder, his owne ouer-freight;
Mens Reasons, and their Learnings, shipwrackt quite;
And their Religion, that should still be One,

Takes ſhapes ſo many, that moſt know't in none.
Which, I admiring (ſince, in each man ſhinde
A light ſo cleere, that by it, all might finde
(Being well informd) their obiect perfect Peace,
Which keepes the narrow path to Happineſſe)
In that diſcourſe; I ſhund, (as is my vſe)
The iarring preace, and all their times abuſe;
T'enioy leaſt trodden fieldes, and fre'eſt ſhades;
Wherein (of all the pleaſure that inuades
The life of man, and flies all vulgar feet,
Since ſilent meditation is moſt ſweet)
I ſat to it; diſcourſing what maine want
So ranſackt man; that it did quite ſupplant
The inward Peace I ſpake of; letting in
(At his looſe veines) lad warre, and all his ſinne.
When, ſodainely, a comfortable light
Brake through the ſhade; and, after it, the ſight
Of a moſt graue, and goodly perſon ſhinde;
With eys turnd vpwards, & was outward, blind;
But, inward; paſt, and future things, he ſawe;
And was to both, and preſent times, their lawe.
His ſacred boſome was ſo full of fire,
That t'was tranſparent; and made him expire
His breath in flames, that did inſtruct (me thought)
And (as my ſoule were then at full) they wrought.
At which, I caſting downe my humble eyes,
Not daring to attempt their ſeruencies;
He thus beſpake me; Deare minde, do not feare
My ſtrange apparance; Now t'is time t'outweare
Thy baſhfull diſpoſition, and put on
As confident a countnance, as the Sunne.
For what haſt thou to looke on, more diuine,

And

And horrid, then man is; as hee ſhould ſhine,
And as he doth? what, free'd from this worlds ſtrife;
What he is entring; and what, ending life?
All which, thou onely ſtudieſt, and doſt knowe;
And, more then which, is onely ſought for ſhowe.
Thou muſt not vndervalue wh at thou haſt,
In weighing it with that, which more is grac't;
The worth that weigheth inward, ſhould not long
For outward prices. This ſhould make thee ſtrong
In thy cloſe value; Nought ſo good can be
As that which laſts good, betwixt God, and thee.
Remember thine owne verſe——Should Heauen turn Hell,
For deedes well done, I would do euer well.
This heard, with ioy enough, to breake the twine
Of life and ſoule, ſo apt to breake as mine;
I brake into a trance, and then remainde
(Like him) an onely ſoule; and ſo obtainde
Such bouldneſſe, by the ſenſe hee did controule;
That I ſet looke, to looke; and ſoule to ſoule.
I view'd him at his brighteſt; though, alas,
With all acknowledgement, of what hee was
Beyond what I found habited in me;
And thus I ſpake; O thou that (blinde) doſt ſee
My hart, and ſoule; what may I reckon thee?
Whoſe heauenly look ſhowes not; nor voice ſounds man?
I am (ſayd hee) that ſpirit Elyſian,
That (in thy natiue ayre; and on the hill
Next Hitchins left hand) did thy boſome fill,
With ſuch a flood of ſoule; that thou wert faine
(With exclamations of her Rapture then)
To vent it, to the Echoes of the vale;
When (medicating of me) a ſweet gale

Brought me vpon thee; and thou didſt inherit
My true ſenſe (for the time then) in my ſpirit;
And I, inuiſiblie, went prompting thee,
To thoſe fayre Greenes; where thou didſt engliſh me.
Scarce he had vttered this, when well I knewe
It was my Princes Homer; whoſe deare viewe
Renew'd my gratefull memorie of the grace
His Highneſſe did me for him: which, in face,
Me thought the Spirit ſhow'd, was his delight;
And added glory to his heauenly plight:
Who tould me, he brought ſtay to all my ſtate;
That hee was Angell to me; Starre, and Fate;
Aduancing Colours of good hope to me;
And tould me, my retired age ſhould ſee
Heauens bleſſing, in a free, and harmeleſſe life,
Conduct me, through Earths peace-pretending ſtrife,
To that true Peace, whoſe ſearch I ſtill intend,
And to the calme Shore of a loued ende.
But now, as I caſt round my rauiſht eye,
To ſee, if this free Soule had companie;
Or that, alone, hee louingly purſude
The hidden places of my Solitude;
He rent a Cloude downe, with his burning hand
That at his backe hung, twixt me, and a Land
Neuer inhabited; and ſayd; Now, behould
What maine defect it is that doth enfould
The World, in ominous flatteries of a Peace
So full of worſe then warre; whoſe ſterne encreaſe
Deuours her iſſue. With which words, I view'd
A Lady, like a Deitie indew'd;
(But weeping, like a woman) and made way
Out of one Thicket, that ſawe neuer day,

Towards

Towards another; bearing vndemeath
Her arme, a Coffine, for ſome prize of death;
And after her (in funerall forme) did goe
The woddes foure-footed Beaſts, by two, and two;
A Male, and Female, matcht, of euerie kinde;
And after them; with like inſtinct enclinde,
The ayrie Nation felt her ſorrowes ſtings;
Fell on the earth, kept rancke, and hung their wings:
Which ſight I much did pittie, and admire;
And longd to knowe the dame that could inſpire
Thoſe Beſtials, with ſuch humane Forme, and ruthe;
And how I now ſhould knowe, the hidden Truthe
(As Homer promiſt) of that maine defect
That makes men, all their inward Peace reiect
For name of outward: Then hee tooke my hand;
Led to her; and would make my ſelfe demand,
(Though he could haue reſolv'd me) what ſhee was?
And from what cauſe, thoſe ſtrange effects had paſs?
For whom, She bore that Coffine? and ſo mournd?
To all which; with all mildenſſe, ſhe returnd
Anſwere; that ſhe was Peace; ſent down from heauen
With charge, from the Almightie Deitie giuen,
T'attend on men; who now had baniſht her
From their ſocieties, and made her erre
In that wilde deſert; onely Humane loue
(Baniſht in like ſort) did a long time proue
That life with her; but now, alas, was dead,
And lay in that wood to bee buried;
For whom ſhe bore that Coffine, and did mourne;
And that thoſe Beaſts were ſo much humane, borne,
That they, in nature, felt a loue to Peace;
For which, they followd her, when men did ceaſe.

This went ſo neere her heart, it left her tongue;
And (ſilent) ſhe gaue time, to note whence ſprung
Mens want of Peace; which was from want of loue:
And I obſerv'd now, what that peace did proue
That men made ſhift with, & did ſo much pleaſe.
For now, the Sunne declining to the Seas,
Made long miſſhapen ſhadowes; and true Peace
(Here walking in his Beames) caſt ſuch encreaſe
Of ſhaddowe from her; that I ſaw it glide
Through Cities, Courts, and Countryes; and deſcride,
How, in her ſhadowe only, men there liv'd,
While ſhee walkt here ith Sunne: and all that thriv'd
Hid in that ſhade their thrift; nought but her ſhade
Was Bullwarke gainſt all warre that might inuade
Their Countries, or their Conſciences; ſince Loue
(That ſhould giue Peace, her ſubſtance) now they droue
Into the Deſerts; where hee ſufferd Fate,
And whoſe ſad Funerals Beaſts muſt celebrate:
With whom, I freely wiſht, I had beene nurſt;
Becauſe they follow Nature, at their wurſt;
And at their beſt, did teach her. As wee went
I felt a ſcruple, which I durſt not vent,
No not to Peace her ſelfe, whom it concernd,
For feare to wrong her; So well I haue learnd,
To ſhun iniuſtice, euen to doues, or flies;
But, to the Diuell, or the Deſtinies,
Where I am iuſt, and knowe I honour Truth,
Ile ſpeake my thoughts, in ſcorne of what enſu'th.
Yet (not reſolv'd in th'other) there did ſhine
A Beame of Homers fre'er ſoule, in mine,
That made me ſee, I might propoſe my doubt;
Which was; If this were true Peace I found out,

That

That felt ſuch paſſion? I prov'd her ſad part;
And prayd her call, her voice out of her hart
(There, kept a wrongfull priſoner to her woe)
To anſwere, why ſhee was afflicted ſo.
Or how, in her, ſuch contraries could fall;
That taught all ioy, and was the life of all?
Shee aunſwered; Homer tould me that there are
Paſſions, in which corruption hath no ſhare;
There is a ioy of ſoule; and why not then
A griefe of ſoule, that is no skathe to men?
For both are Paſſions, though not ſuch as raigne
In blood, and humor, that engender paine.
Free ſufferance for the truth, makes ſorrow ſing,
And mourning farre more ſweet, then banqueting.
Good, that deſerueth ioy (receiuing ill)
Doth merit iuſtly, as much ſorrow ſtill:
And is it a corruption to do right?
Griefe, that diſchargeth Conſcience, is delight:
One ſets the other off. To ſtand at gaze
In one poſition, is a ſtupide maze,
Fit for a Statue. This reſolv'd me well,
That Griefe, in Peace, and Peace in Griefe might dwell.
And now fell all things from their naturall Birth:
Paſſion in Heauen; Stupiditie, in Earth,
Inuerted all; the Muſes, Vertues, Graces,
Now ſufferd rude, and miſerable chaces
From mens ſocieties, to that deſert heath;
And after them, Religion (chac't by death)
Came weeping, bleeding to the Funerall:
Sought her deare Mother Peace; and downe did fall,
Before her, fainting, on her horned knees;
Turnd horne, with praying for the miſeries

She left the world in; desperate in their sinne;
Marble, her knees pearc't; but heauen could not winne
To stay the weightie ruine of his Glorie
In her sad Exile; all the memorie
Of heauen, and heauenly things, rac't of all hands;
Heauen moues so farre off, that men say it stands;
And Earth is turnd the true, and mouing Heauen;
And so tis left; and so is all Truth driuen
From her false bosome; all is left alone,
Till all bee orderd with confusion.
Thus the poore broode of Peace; driuen, & distrest,
Lay brooded all beneath their mothers breast;
Who fell vpon them weeping, as they fell:
All were so pinde, that she containde them well.
And in this Chaos, the digestion
And beautie of the world, lay thrust and throwne.
In this deiection, Peace pourd out her Teares,
Worded (with some pause) in my wounded Eares.

INVOCATIO.

O ye three-times-thrice sacred Quiristers,
Of Gods great Temple; the small Vniuerse
Of ruinous man: (thus prostrate as ye lye
Brooded, and Loded with Calamitie,
Contempt, and shame, in your true mother, Peace)
As you make sad my soule, with your misease:
So make her able fitly to disperse
Your sadnesse, and her owne, in sadder verse.
Now (olde, and freely banisht with your selues
From mens societies; as from rockes, and shelues)
Helpe me to sing, and die, on our Thames shore;
And let her lend me, her waues to deplore.

(In yours, and your moſt holy Siſters falls)
Heauens fall, and humane Loues, laſt funeralls.
And thou, great Prince of men; let thy ſweete graces
Shine on theſe teares; and drie, at length, the faces
Of Peace, and all her heauen-allyed brood;
From whoſe Doues eyes, is ſhed the precious blood
Of Heauens deare Lamb, that freſhly bleeds in them.
Make theſe no toyes then; gird the Diadem
Of thrice great Britaine, with their Palm and Bayes:
And with thy Eagles feathers, daigne to raiſe
The heauie body of my humble Muſe;
That thy great Homers ſpirit in her may vſe
Her topleſs flight, and beare thy Fame aboue
The reach of Mortalls, and their earthy loue;
To that high honour, his Achilles wonne,
And make thy glory farre out-ſhine the Sunne.
While this ſmall time gaue Peace (in her kinde Throes)
Vent for the violence of her ſodaine woes;
She turnd on her right ſide, and (leaning on
Her tragique daughters boſome) lookt vpon
My heauy lookes, drownd in imploring teares
For her, and that ſo wrongd deare Race of hers.
At which, euen Peace, expreſt a kinde of Spleene.
And, as a carefull Mother, I haue ſeene (ger:

So Peace chid me; and firſt ſhed teares of anger.

The Teares of Peace.

Why haunt'ſt thou freely, theſe vnhaunted places,
Emptie of pleaſures? empty of all Graces,
Faſhions, and Riches; by the beſt purſude
With broken Sleepe, Toyle, Loue, Zeale, Seruitude;
With feare and trembling, with whole liues, and Soules?
While thou break'ſt ſleepes, digſt vnder Earth, like moules,
To liue, to ſeeke me out, whome all men fly:
And think'ſt to finde, light in obſcuritie,
Eternitie, in this deepe vale of death:
Look'ſt euer vpwards, and liu'ſt ſtill beneath;
Fill'ſt all thy actions, with ſtrife, what to thinke,
Thy Braine with Ayre, and skatterſlit ininke:
Of which thou mak'ſt weeds for thy ſoule to weare,
As out of faſhion, as the bodies are.
Interlo. I grant their ſtrangeneſſe, and their too ill grace,
And too much wretchedneſſe, to beare the face
Or any likeneſſe of my ſoule in them:
Whoſe Inſtruments, I rue with many a Streame
Of ſecret Teares for their extream defects,
In vttering her true forms: but their reſpects
Need not be leſs'ned, for their being ſtrange,
Or not ſo vulgar, as the reſt that range
With headlong Raptures, through the multitude:
Of whom they get grace, for their being rude.
Nought is ſo ſhunde by Virtue, throwne from Truth,
As that which drawes the vulgar Dames and Youth.
Pea. Truth muſt confeſſe it: for where I ues there one,
That Truth or Vertue, for themſelues alone,
Or ſeekes, or not contemns? All, all purſue
Wealth, Glory, Greatneſſe, Pleaſure, Faſhions new.
Who ſtudies, ſtudies theſe: who ſtudies not
And ſees that ſtudie, layes the vulgar Plot;
That all the Learning he gets liuing by,
Men but for forme, or humour dignifie
(As himſelfe ſtudies, but for forme, and ſhowe,
And neuer makes his ſpeciall end, to knowe)
And that an idle, ayrie man of Newes,

A ſtanding Face; a propertie to vſe
In all things vil-, makes Booke-wormes, creepe to him:
How ſcorns he bookes, and booke-worms! O how dim
Burnes a true Soules light, in his Baſtard eyes!
And, as a Forreſt ouer-grow'n breedes Flyes,
Todes, Adders, Sauadges, that all men ſhunne;
When, on the South-ſide, in a freſh May Sunne,
In varied Heards, the Beaſts lie out, and ſleepe,
The buſie Gnatts, in ſwarms a buzzing keepe,
And guild their empty bodies (liſt aloft)
In beames, that though they ſee all, difference nought:
So, in mens meerly outward, and falſe Peace,
Inſteade of poliſht men, and true encreaſe,
She brings forth men, with vices ouer-growne:
Women, ſo light, and like, fewe knowe their owne:
For milde and humane tongues, tongues forkt that ſting:
And all theſe (while they may) take Sunne, and ſpring,
To help them ſleep, and floriſh: on whoſe beames,
And branches, vp they clime, in ſuch extreams
Of proude confuſion, from iuſt Lawes ſo farre,
That in their Peace, the long Robe ſweeps like warre;
That Robe ſerues great men: why are great ſo rude, Int.
Since great, and meane, are all but multitude? Pea.
For regular Learning, that ſhould difference ſet
Twixt all mens worths, and make the meane, or great,
As that is meane or great (or chiefe ſtroke ſtrike)
Serues the Plebeian and the Lord alike.
Their obiects, ſhowe their learnings are all one;
Their liues, their obiects; Learning lov'd by none.
You meane, for moſt part: nor would it diſpleaſe Int.
That moſt part, if they heard; ſince they profeſſe,
Contempt of learning: Nor eſteeme it fit,
Nobleſſe ſhould ſtudy, ſee, or count'nance it.
Can men in blood be Noble, not in ſoule? Pea.
Reaſon abhorres it; ſince what doth controule
The rudeneſſe of the blood, and makes it Noble
(Or hath chiefe meanes, high birth-right to redouble,

In

In making manners ſoft, and man-like milde,
Not ſuffering humanes to runne proude, or wilde)
Is Soule, and learning; (or in loue, or act)
In blood where both faile then, lyes Nobleſs wrackt,
Interlo. It cannot be denyde: but could you proue,
As well, that th'act of learning, or the loue,
(Loue being the act in will) ſhould difference ſet,
Twixt all mens worths, and make the meane or great,
As learning is, or great, or meane in them;
Then cleare, her Right, ſtood to mans Diadem,
Pea. To proue that Learning (the ſoules actuall frame;
Without which, tis a blanke; a ſmoke-hid flame)
Should ſit great Arbitreſſe, of all things donne,
And in your ſoules, (like Gnomons in the Sunne)
Giue Rules to all the circles of your liues;
I proue it, by the Regiment God giues
To man, of all things; to the ſoule, of man;
To Learning, of the Soule. If then it can
Rule, liue; of all things beſt, is it not beſt?
O who, what god makes greateſt, dares make leaſt?
But, to vſe their tearms; Life is Roote and Creſt
To all mans Cote of Nobleſs; his ſoule is,
Field to that Cote; and learning differences
All his degrees in honour, being the Cote.
Simi. And as a Statuarie, hauing got
An Alablaſter, bigge enough to cut
A humane image in: till he hath put
His tooles, and art to it; hew'n, form'd, left none
Of the redundant matter in the Stone;
It beares the image of a man, no more,
Then of a Woolf, a Cammell, or a Boare:
So when the Soule is to the body giuen;

Into the Subſtance, thoſe fit forms that make
His perfect Image; which are then impreſt
By Learning and impulſion; that inueſt
Man with Gods forme in liuing Holineſſe,
By cutting from his Body the exceſſe
Of Humors, perturbations and Affects;
Which Nature (without Art) no more ejects,
Then without tooles, a naked Artizan
Can, in rude ſtone, cut th'Image of a man.
How then do Ignorants? who, oft, we trie,
Rule perturbations, liue more humanely Int.
Then men held learnd?
Who are not learn'd indeed; Pea.
More then a houſe fram'd looſe, (that ſtill doth needs
The haling vp, and ioyning) is a houſe:
Nor can you call, men meere Religious,
(That haue good wills, to knowledge) Ignorant;
For, virtuous knowledge hath two waies to plant;
By Powre infus'd, and Acquiſition;
The firſt of which, thoſe good men, graft vpon;
For good life is th'effect, of learnings Act;
Which th'action of the minde, did firſt compact
By infuſde loue to Learning gainſt all ill,
Conqueſts firſt ſtep, is to all good, the will.
If Learning then, in loue or act muſt be, Int.
Meanes to good life, and true humanitie;
Where are our Scarre-crowes now, or men of ragges,
Of Titles meerely, Places, Fortunes, Bragges,

Peace. Of men, there are three sorts, that most foes be
To Learning and her loue; themselues and me:
Actiue, Passiue, and Intellectiue men:
Whose selfe-loues; Learning, and her loue disdaine.
Your Actiue men, consume their whole lifes fire,
In thirst of State-height, higher still and higher,
(Like seeled Pigeons) mounting, to make sport,
To lower lookers on; in seeing how short
They come of that they seeke, and with what trouble;
Lamely, and farre from Nature, they redouble
Their paines in flying, more then humbler witts,
To reach death, more direct. For Death that sits,
Vpon the fist of Fate, past highest Ayre,
(Since she commands all liues, within that Sphere)
The higher men aduance; the neerer findes
Her seeled Quarries; when, in bittrest windes,
Lightnings, and thunders, and in sharpest hayles
Fate casts her off at States; when lower Sayles
Slide calmely to their ends. Your Passiue men
(So cali'd of onely passing time in vaine)
Passe it, in no good exercise; but are
In meates, and cuppes laborious; and take care
To lose without all care their Soule spent Time;
And since they haue no meanes, nor Spirits to clime,
Like Fowles of Prey, in any high affaire;
See how like Kites they bangle in the Ayre,
To stoope at scraps, and garbidge; in respect,
Of that which men of true peace should select;

And how they trot out, in their liues, the Ring;
With idlely iterating oft one thing,
A new-fought Combat, an affaire at Sea;
A Marriage, or a Progreſſe, or a Plea.
No Newes, but fits them, as if made for them,
Though it be forg'd, but of a womans dreame;
And ſtuffe with, ſuch ſtolne ends, their manleſſe breaſts,
(Sticks, rags, and mud) they ſeem meer Puttocks neſts:
Curious in all mens actions, but their owne;
All men, and all things cenſure, though know none.
Your Intellectiue men, they ſtudy hard
Not to get knowledge, but for meere reward.
And therefore that true knowledge that ſhould be
Their ſtudies end, and is in Nature free,
Will not be made their Broker; hauing powre
(With her ſole ſelfe) to bring both Bride, and dowre.
They haue ſome ſhadowes of her (as of me,
Adulterate outward Peace) but neuer ſee
Her true, and heauenly face. Yet thoſe ſhades ſerue
(Like errant Knights, that by enchantments ſwerue,
From their true Ladyes being; and embrace
An ougly Witch, with her phantaſtique face)
To make them thinke, Truths ſubſtance in their arms:
Which that they haue not, but her ſhadowes charmes,
See if my prooſes, be like their Arguments
That leaue Opinion ſtill, her free diſſents.
They haue not me with them; that all men knowe
The higheſt fruite that doth of knowledge grow;
The Bound of all true formes, and onely Act;

Ill diſpoſition) their skills looke as hie
And reſt in that diuine Securitie;
See if their liues make proofe of ſuch a Peace,
For Learnings Truth makes all lifes vain war ceaſe;
It making peace with God, and ioines to God;
Whoſe information driues her Period
Through all the Bodies paſſiue Inſtruments;

That is, a habite of both habits ſtanding;
The Bloods vaine humours, euer countermaunding.
But, if theſe ſhowe, more humour then th'vnlearn'd;
If in them more vaine paſſion be diſcern'd;

Of his ſole imitation; and to ſway,
Your lifes loue ſo, that hee may ſtill be Center
To all your pleaſures; and you, (here) may enter
The next lifes peace; in gouerning ſo well
Your ſenſuall parts, that you, as free may dwell
Of vulgare Raptures, here; as when calme death
Diſſolues that learned Empire, with your Breath.
To teach, and liue thus, is the onely vſe,
And end of Learning. Skill that doth produce
But tearmes, and tongues, and Parrating of Arte,
Without that powre to rule the errant part;
Is that which ſome call, learned ignorance;
A ſerious trifle; error in a trance.
And let a Scholler, all earths volumes carrie,
He will be but a walking dictionarie:
A meere articulate Clocke, that doth but ſpeake

So that, as Trauaylers, ſeeke their peace through ſtorms,
In paſſing many Seas, for many forms,
Of forreigne gouernment; indure the paine
Of many faces ſeeing; and the gaine
That Strangers make, of their ſtrange-louing humors;
Learn tongues; keep note books; all to feed the tumors
Of vaine diſcourſe at home; or ſerue the courſe
Of State employment, neuer hauing force
T'employ themſelues; but idle complements
Muſt pay their paines, coſts, ſlaueries, all their Rents;
And, though they many men knowe, get few friends:
So couetous Readers; ſetting many endes
To their much skill to talke; ſtudiers of Phraſe;
Shifters in Art; to flutter in the Blaze
Of ignorant count'nance; to obtaine degrees
And lye in Learnings bottome, like the Lees,
To be accounted deepe, by ſhallow men;
And carue all Language, in one glorious Pen;
May haue much fame for learning: but th'effect
Proper to perfect Learning; to direct
Reaſon in ſuch an Art, as that it can
Turne blood to ſoule, and make both, one calme man;
So making peace with God; doth differ farre
From Clearkes that goe with God & man to warre.

Int. But may this Peace, and mans true Empire then,
By learning be obtainde? and taught to men?

Pea. Let all men iudge; who is it can denie,

That the rich crowne of ould Humanitie,
Is ſtill your birth-right? and was ne're let downe
From heauen, for rule of Beaſts liues, but your owne?
You learne the depth of Arts; and (curious) dare
By them (in Natures counterfaits) compare
Almoſt with God; to make perpetually
Motion like heauens; to hang ſad Riuers by
The ayre, in ayre; and earth, twixt earth and heauen
By his owne paiſe. And are theſe vertues giuen
To powrefull Art, and Vertue's ſelfe denied?
This proues the other, vaine, and falſified.
Wealth, Honour, and the Rule of Realmes doth fall
In leſſe then Reaſons compaſſe; yet, what all
Thoſe things are giuen for (which is liuing well)
Wants diſcipline, and reaſon to compell.
O fooliſh men! how many waies ye vex
Your liues with pleaſing them? and ſtill perplex
Your liberties, with licence? euery way
Caſting your eyes, and faculties aſtray
From their ſole obiect? If ſome few bring forth
(In Nature, freely) ſomething of ſome worth;
Much rude and worthleſſe humour runs betwixt;
(Like fruit in deſerts) with vile matter mixt.
Nor (ſince they flatter fleſh ſo) they are bould
(As a moſt noble ſpectacle) to behould
Their owne liues; and (like ſacred light) to beare
There Reaſon inward: for the Soule (in feare
Of euerie ſort of vice, ſhee there containes)
Flies out; and wanders about other mens;
Feeding, and fatting, her infirmities.
And as in auntient Cities, t'was the guiſe
To haue ſome Ports of ſad, and hapleſſe vent;

Through which, all executed men they ſent;
All filth; all offall, caſt from what purg'd ſinne;
Nought, chaſte, or ſacred, there going out, or in:
So, through mens refuſe eares, will nothing pearſe
Thats good, or elegant; but the ſword; the herſe;
And all that doth abhorre, from mans pure vſe,
Is each mans onely Siren; only Muſe.
And thus, for one God; one fit good; they priſe
Theſe idle, fooliſh, vile varieties.

Int. Wretched eſtate of men, by fortune bleſt;
That being euer idle, neuer reſt;
That haue goods, ere they earne them; and for that,
Want art to vſe them. To bee wonderd at
Is Iuſtice; for Proportion, Ornament;
None of the Graces, is ſo excellent.
Vile things, adorne her: me thought, once I ſawe
How, by the Seas ſhore, ſhe ſat giuing lawe
Euen to the ſtreames, and fiſh (moſt looſe, and wilde)
And was (to my thoughts) wondrous ſweet and milde;
Yet fire flew from her that diſſolued Rocks;
Her lookes, to Pearle turnd pebble; and her locks,
The rough, and ſandy bankes, to burniſht gould;
Her white left hand, did gou'den bridles holde;
And, with her right, ſhe wealthy gifts did giue;
Which with their left hands, men did ſtill receiue;
Vpon a world in her chaſte lappe, did lye,
A little Iuory Book, that ſhow'd mine eye,
But one Page onely; that one verſe containde,
Where all Arts, were contracted, and explainde;
All policies of Princes, all their forces;
Rules for their feares, cares, dangers, pleaſures, purſes,
All the fayre progreſſe of their happineſſe here,

Iuſtice

Iuſtice conuerted, and compoſed there.
All which I thought on, when I had expreſt
Why great men, of the great ſtates they poſſeſt,
Enioyd ſo little; and I now muſt note
The large ſtraine of a verſe, I long ſince wrote.
Which (me thought) much ioy, to men poore preſented;
God hath made none (that all might be) contented.
It might (for the capacitie it beares) Peace.
Be that concealed and expreſſiue verſe,
That Iuſtice, in her Iuorie Manuell writ;
Since all Lines to mans Peace, are drawne in it.
For great men; though ſuch ample ſtuffe they haue
To ſhape contentment; yet, ſince (like a waue)
It flitter, and takes all formes, retayning none;
(Not fitted to their patterne, which is one)
They may content themſelues; God hath not giuen,
To men meere earthly, the true Ioyes of heauen;
And ſo their wilde ambitions either ſtay;
Or turne their headſtrong courſe, the better way.
For poore men; their cares may be richly eaſde;
Since rich (with all they haue) liue as diſpleaſde.
You teach me to be plaine. But whats the cauſe, Int.
That great, and rich, whoſe ſtates winne ſuch applauſe;
With ſuch enforc't, and vile varieties,
Spend time; nor giue their liues glad ſacrifice;
But when they eate, and drinke, with tales, ieſts, ſounds;
As if (like frantique men, that feele no wounds)
They would expire in laughters? and ſo erre
From their right way; that like a Trauayler,
(Wearieſt when neereſt to his iourneys ende)
Time beſt ſpent euer, with moſt paine they ſpend?
The cauſe, is want of Learning; which (being right) Pea.

Makes idleneſſe a paine; and paine delight.
It makes men knowe, that they (of all things borne
Beneath the ſiluer Moone, and goulden Morne)
Being onely formes of God; ſhould onely fix
One forme of life to thoſe formes; and not mix
With Beaſts in formes of their liues. It doth teach,
To giue the ſoule her Empire; and ſo reach
To rule of all the bodies mutinous Realme;
In which (once ſeated) She then takes the Helme,
And gouernes freely; ſtering to one Port.
Then, (like a man in health) the whole conſort
Of his tun'd body, ſings; which otherwiſe,
Is like one full of weiward maladies,
Still out of tune; and (like to Spirits raiſde
Without a Circle) neuer is appaiſ'de.
And then, they haue no ſtrength, but weakens them;
No greatnes, but doth cruſh them into ſtreame;
No libertie, but turnes into their ſnare;
Their learnings then, do light them but to erre;
Their ornaments, are burthens; their delights,
Are mercinarie, ſeruile Paraſites,
Betraying, laughing; Feends, that raiſde in feates,
At parting, ſhake their Rooſes about their eares;
Th'impriſon'd thirſt, the fortunes of the Free;
The Free, of Rich; Rich, of Nobilitie;
Nobilitie, of Kings; and Kings, Gods thrones;
Euen to their lightning flames; and thunder-ſtones.
O liberall Learning, that well vſde, giues vſe
To all things good; how bad is thy abuſe!
When, onely thy diuine reflection can
(That lights but to thy loue) make good a man;
How can the regular Body of thy light,

Informe, and decke him? the Ills infinite,
That (like beheaded Hydra's in that Fen
Of bloud, and flesh, in lewd illiterate men)
Answere their amputations, with supplyes
That twist their heads, and euer double rise;
Herculean Learning conquers; And O see
How many, and of what fowle formes they be?
Vnquiet, wicked thoughts; vnnumbred passions;
Poorenesse of Counsailes; howrely fluctuations;
(In entercourse) of woes, and false delights;
Impotent wils to goodnesse; Appetites
That neuer will bee bridl'd; satisfied;
Nor know how, or with what to be supplyed;
Feares, and distractions, mixt with greedinesse;
Stupidities of those things ye possesse;
Furies for what ye lose; wrongs done for nonces;
For present, past, and future things, at once
Cares vast, and endlesse; miseries, swolne with pride;
Vertues despisde, and vices glorified.
All these, true Learning calmes, and can subdue:
But who turnes learning this way? All pursue
Warre with each other, that exasperates these;
For things without; whose ends are inward peace;
And yet those inward Rebels they maintaine.
And as your curious sort of Passiue men,
Thrust their heads through the Roofs of Rich & Poore;
Through all their liues, and fortunes, and explore
Forraigne, and home-affayres; their Princes Courts,
Their Counsaile, and Bedchambers for reports;
And (like free-booters) wander out, to win
Matter to feede their mutinous Route within;

Their true-fought inward Peace, for outward boote;
So Learned men, in controuerſies ſpend
(Of tongues, and tearmes, readings, and labours pend)
Their whole liues ſtudies; Glorie, Riches, Place,
In full crie, with the vulgare giuing Chace;
And neuer, with their learnings true vſe ſtriue
To bridle ſtrifes within them; and to liue
Like men of Peace, whome Art of Peace begat:
But, as their deedes, are moſt adulterate,
And ſhowe them falſe Sons, to their Peacefull Mother,
In thoſe warres; ſo their Arts, are prov'd no other.
And let the beſt of them, a ſearch impoſe
Vpon his Art: for all the things ſhee knowes
(All being referd, to all, to her vnknowne)
They will obtaine the ſame proportion
That doth a little brooke that neuer ran
Through Summers Sunne; compar'd with th'Ocean.
But, could he Oracles ſpeake; and wright to charme
A wilde of Sauadges; take Natures Arme,
And plucke into his ſearch, the Circuit
Of Earth, and Heauen; the Seas ſpace, and the ſpirit
Of euerie Starre: the Powers of Herbs, and Stones;
Yet touch not, at his perturbations;
Nor giue them Rule, and temper, to obay
Imperiall Reaſon; in whoſe Soueraigne ſway,
Learning is wholly vs'd, and dignified;
To what end ſerues he? is his learning tryed
That comforting, and that creating Fire
That faſhions men? or that which doth inſpire
Cities with ciuile conflagrations,
Countries, and kingdomes? That Art that attones
All oppoſition to good life, is all;

Liue

Liue well ye Learnd; and all men ye enthrall.
Alas they are diſcourag'd in their courſes, Interlo.
And (like ſurpris'd Forts) beaten from their forces.
Bodies, on Rights of Soules did neuer growe
With ruder Rage, then barbarous Torrents flowe
Ouer their ſacred Paſtures; bringing in
Weedes, and all rapine; Temples now begin
To ſuffer ſecond deluge; Sinne-drownde Beaſts,
Making their Altars crack; and the filde Neſts
Of vulturous Fowles, filling their holy places;
For wonted Ornaments, and Religious graces.
The chiefe cauſe is, ſince they themſelues betraie; Pea.
Take their Foes baites, for ſome particular ſwaie
T'inuert their vniuerſall; and this ſtill,
Is cauſe of all ills elſe; their liuing ill.
Alas! that men ſhould ſtriue for others ſwaie; Int.
But firſt to rule themſelues: And that being waie
To all mens Bliſs; why is it trod by none?
And why are rules ſo dully looke vpon
That teach that liuely Rule?
O horrid thing! Pea.
Tis Cuſtome powres into your common ſpring
Such poyſon of Example, in things vaines

Of what they are, and ſhalbe (which may be
By Reaſon, in deſpight of Policie)
And in one true courſe, couch their whole Affaires
To one true bliſſe, worth all the ſpawne of theirs;
If halfe the idle ſpeech, men Paſſiue ſpend,
At ſenſuall meetings, when they recommend
Their ſanguine Soules, in laughters, to their Peace,
Were ſpent in Counſailes how they might decreaſe
That frantique humour of ridiculous blood
(Which addes, they vainely thinke, to their liues flood)
And ſo conuerted, in true humane mirth,
To ſpeech, what they ſhall be (diſſolv'd from Earth)
In bridling it in fleſh; with all the ſcope
Of their owne knowledge here; and future hope:
If (laſt of all) your Intellectiue men
Would mixe the ſtreames of euery iarring Penne.
In one calme Current; that like land flouds, now
Make all Zeales bounded Riuers ouer-flowe;
Firme Truth, with queſtion, euery howre purſue;
And yet will have no queſtion, all is true:
Search in that troubled Ocean, for a Ford
That by it ſelfe runnes; and muſt beare accord
In each mans ſelf; by baniſhing falſhood there,
Wrath, luſt, pride, earthy thoughts; before elſewhere.
(For, as in one man, is the world incloſde,
So to forme one, it ſhould be all diſpoſde:)
If all theſe would concurre to this one end,
It would aske all their powres; and all would ſpend
Life with that reall ſweetneſſe, which they dreame
Comes in with obiects that are meere extreame:
And make them outward pleaſures ſtill apply
Which neuer can come in, but by that key;

Others aduancements, others Fames desiring;
Thirsting, exploring, praysing, and admiring;
Like lewd adulterers, that their owne wiues scorne,
And other mens, with all their wealth, adorne.
Why, in all outraying, varyed ioyes, and courses,
That in these errant times, tire all mens forces,
Is this so common wonder of our dayes?
That in poore former times, such a fewe could raise
So many wealthy Temples, and these none?
All were deuout then; all deuotions one;
And to one end conuerted; and when men
Giue vp themselues to God; all theirs goes then:
A few well-giuen, are worth a world of ill;
And worlds of Powre, not worth one poore good-will.
And what's the cause, that (being but one Truth) spreds
About the world so manie thousand heads,
Of false Opinions, all self-lov'd as true?
Onely affection, to things more then due:
One Error kist, begetteth infinite.
How can men finde truth, in waies opposite?
And with what force, they must take opposite wayes
When all haue opposite obiects? Truth displaies
One coloured ensigne; and the world pursues
Ten thousand colours: see (to iudge, who vse
Truth in their Arts;) what light their liues doe giue:
For wherefore doe they study, but to liue?
See I Eternities streight milke-white waie,
And One, in this lifes crooked vanities straie;
And, shall I thinke he knowes Truth, following Error?
This; onely this; is the infallible myrror,
To showe, why Ignorants, with learn'd men vaunt,
And why your learn'd men, are so ignorant.

Why euery Youth, in one howre will be old
In euery knowledge; and why Age doth mould.
Then; As in Rules of true Philoſophie
There muſt be euer due Analogie
Betwixt the Powre that knowes, and that is knowne,
So ſurely ioynde that they are euer one;
The vnderſtanding part tranſcending ſtill
To that it vnderſtands, that, to his skill;
All, offering to the Soule, the Soule to God;
(By which do all things make their Period
In his high Powre; and make him, All in All;
So, to aſcend, the high-heauen-reaching Skale
Of mans true Peace; and make his Art entire,
By calming all his Errors in deſire;
(Which muſt preceede, that higher happineſſe)
Proportion ſtill, muſt trauerſe her acceſſe
Betwixt his powre, and will; his Senſe and Soule;
And euermore th'exorbitance controule
Of all forms, paſſing through the bodies Powre,
Till in the ſoule they reſt, as in their Towre.
Int. But; as Earths groſſe and elementall fire,
Cannot maintaine it ſelfe; but doth require
Freſh matter ſtill, to giue it heate, and light;
And, when it is enflam'd; mounts not vpright;
But ſtruggles in his lame impure aſcent;
Now this waie works, and then is that waie bent,
Not able, ſtraight, t'aſpire to his true Sphere
Where burns the fire, eternall, and ſincere;
So, beſt ſoules here; with heartieſt zeales enflam'd
In their high flight for heauen; earth-broos'd and lam'd)
Make many faint approches; and are faine,

Vp to his boſome; which (being deaw'd in time
With theſe my Teares) may to my cõforts clyme:
Which (when all Pleaſures, into Palſeys turne,
And Sunne-like Pomp; in his own clowds ſhal mourne)
Will be acceptiue. Meane ſpace I will pray,
That hee may turne, ſome toward thought this way;
While the round whirlewindes, of the earths delights
Duſt betwixt him and me; and blinde the ſights
Of all men rauiſht with them; whoſe encreaſe
(You well may tell him) faſhions not true Peace.
The Peace that they informe; learns but to ſquat,
While the ſlye legall foe (that leuels at Warre, through thoſe falſe lights) ſoudainly runs by

Betwixt you, and your ſtrength; and while you lye,
Couching your eares; and flatting euerie lymme
So cloſe to earth, that you would ſeeme to him
The Earth it ſelfe: yet hee knowes who you are;
And, in that vantage, poures on, ready warre.

Concluſio.

THus, by the way, to humane Loues interring,
Theſe marginall, and ſecret teares referring
To my diſpoſure (hauing all this howre
Of our vnwordly conference, giuen powre
To her late-fainting iſſue, to ariſe)
She raiſde her ſelfe, and them; The Progenies
Of that ſo ciuile Deſert, riſing all;
Who fell with her; and to the Funerall
(She bearing ſtill the Coffine) all went on:
And, now giues Time, her ſtates deſcription.
Before her flew Affliction, girt in ſtorms,
Gaſht all with guſhing wounds; and all the formes
Of bane, and miſerie, frowning in her face;
Whom Tyrannie, and Iniuſtice, had in Chace;
Grimme Perſecution, Pouertie, and Shame;
Detraction, Enuie, foule Mishap and lame;
Scruple of Conſcience; Feare, Deceipt, Deſpaire;
Slaunder, and Clamor, that rent all the Ayre;
Hate, Warre, and Maſſacre; vncrowned Toyle;
And Sickenes (t'all the reſt, the Baſe, and Foile)
Crept after; and his deadly weight, trode downe
Wealth, Beautie, and the glorie of a Crowne.
Theſe vſherd her farre of; as figures giuen,

To

To ſhowe, theſe Croſſes borne, make peace with heauen:
But now (made free from them) next her, before;
Peacefull, and young, Herculean ſilence bore
His craggie Club; which vp, aloft, hee hild;
With which, and his forefingers charme hee ſtild
All ſounds in ayre; and left ſo free, mine eares,
That I might heare, the muſique of the Spheres,
And all the Angels, ſinging, out of heauen;
Whoſe tunes were ſolemne (as to Paſſion giuen)
For now, that Iuſtice was the Happineſſe there
For all the wrongs to Right, inflicted here.
Such was the Paſſion that Peace now put on;
And on, all went; when ſoudainely was gone
All light of heauen before vs; from a wood
Whoſe ſight, fore-ſeene (now loſt) amaz'd wee ſtood,
The Sunne ſtill gracing vs; when now (the Ayre Inflam'd with Meteors) we diſcouerd, fayre,
The skipping Gote; the Horſes flaming Mane;
Bearded, and trained Comets; Starres in wane;
The burning ſword; the Firebrand, flying Snake;
The Lance; the Torch; the Licking fire; the Drake:
And all elſe Metors, that did ill abode;
The thunderchid; the lightning leapt abrode;
And yet, when Peace came in, all heauen was cleare;
And then, did all the horrid wood appeare;
Where mortall dangers, more then leaues did growe;
In which wee could not, one free ſteppe beſtowe;
For treading on ſome mutherd Paſſenger,
Who thither, was by witchcraft, forc't to erre.
Whoſe face, the bird hid, that loues Humans beſt;
That hath the bugle eyes, and Roſie Breaſt;
And is the yellow Autumns Nightingall;

Peace

Peace made vs enter here ſecure of all;
Where, in a Caue, that through a Rocke did eate
The monſter, Murther, held his impious Seat:
A heape of panting Harts, ſupported him;
On which, he ſate, gnawing a reeking lymme,
Of ſome man newly murtherd. As he eate
His graue-digg'd Browes, like ſtormy Eaues did ſweat;
Which, like incenſed Fennes, with miſts did ſmoke;
His hyde was rugged, as an aged Oke
With heathie Leproſies; that ſtill hee fed
With hote, raw lyms, of men late murthered.
His Face was like a Meteor, flaſhing blood;
His head all briſtl'd, like a thornie wood;
His necke caſt wrinkles, like a Sea enrag'd;
And, in his vaſt Armes, was the world engag'd,
Bathing his hands in euerie cruell deed;
Whoſe Palmes were hell-deepe lakes of boyling lead;
His thighes were mines of poyſon, torment, griefe;
In which digg'd Fraude, and Trecherie, for reliefe;
Religions Botcher, Policie; and Pride;
Oppreſſion, Slauerie, Flatterie glorified;
Atheiſme, and Tyranny, and gaine vniuſt;
Frantick Ambition, Enuie, ſhagge-heard Luſt;
Both ſorts of Ignorance; and Knowledge ſwell'd;
And ouer theſe, the ould wolfe Auarice held
A goulden Scourge, that dropt, with blood and vapor;
With which, he whipt them to their endleſſe labor.
From vnder heapes, caſt from his fruitfull thyes,
(As ground, to all their damn'd Impieties)
The mourneful Goddeſſe, drew dead Humane Loue;
Nor could they let her entrie, though they ſtroue;
And furnac't on her, all their venemous breath;

(Yet; though all outrage breakes the Peace of death)
She Coffind him; and forth to Funerall
All helpt to beare him: But to sound it all,
My Trumpet fayles; and all my forces shrinke.
Who can enact to life, what kils to thinke?
Nor can the Soules beames bear, through blood & flesh,
Formes of such woe, and height, as now, afresh,
Flow'd from these Obiects: to see Poesie
Prepar'd to doe the speciall obsequie,
And sing the Funerall Oration;
How it did showe, to see her tread vpon
The breast of Death; and on a Furie leane;
How, to her Fist, (as rites of seruice then)
A Cast of Rauens flew; On her shoulders, how
The Foules, that to the Muses Queene we vow,
(The Owle, and Heronshawe) sate, how, for her hayre,
A hapleſſe Comet, hurld about the Ayre
Her curled Beames: whence sparkes, like falling starres,
Vanisht about her; and with windes aduerse,
Were still blowne back; To which the Phœnix flew;
And (burning on her head) would not renew:
How her diuine Oration did moue,
For th' vnredeemed losse of humane Loue;
Obiect mans future state to reasons eye;
The soules infusion; Immortalitie;
And proue her formes firme, that are here impreſt;
How her admirde straines, wrought on euery Beast;
And made the woods cast their Immanitie,
Vp to the Ayre; that did to Cities flye
In Fewell for them: and, in Clowds of smoke,
Euer hang ouer them; cannot be spoke;
Nor how to Humane loue (to Earth now giuen)

A lightening stoop't, and ravisht him to heauen,
And with him Peace, with all her heauenly traine:
Whose outward Rapture, made me inward bleed;
Nor can I therefore, my Intention keepe;
Since Teares want words, & words want teares to weepe.

Corollarium ad Principem.

THus shooke I this abortiue from my Braine;
Which, with it, laie in this vnworthy paine:
Yet sithee your HOMER had his worthy hand
Inuent'ring this delaie of your Command,
To end his Iliades; deigne (Great Prince of men)
To holde before it your great Shielde; and then
It may, doe seruice, worthy this delaie,
To your more worthy Pleasure; and I maie
Regather the sperst fragments of my spirits,
And march with HOMER through his deathless merits,
To your vndying graces. Nor did he
Vanish with this slight vision; but brought me
Home to my Cabine; and did all the waie
Assure me of your Graces constant staie
To his soules Being, wholly naturaliz'd
And made your Highnesse subiect; which he priz'd,
Past all his honours holde in other Lands;
And that (because a Princes maine state stands
In his owne knowledge, and his powre within)
These works that had chiefe virtue to beginne
Those informations; you would holde most deare;
Since false loyes, haue their seasons to appeare

Corollarium ad Principem.

Iuſt as they are; but theſe delights were euer
Perfect and needefull, and would ſtrike you neuer.
I praying for that happie worke of heauen
In your ſweete diſpoſition; the calme Euen
Tooke me to reſt; and he with wings of Fire,
To ſeſt Ayres ſupreame Region did aſpire.

By the euer moſt humbly and truly dedicated to your moſt Princely graces.
